This playground had an explicit requirement; to provide younger users with a safe and exciting place to play. We began with a “twist” on a traditional 3’ slide, knowing that younger children enjoy climbing up slides as much (if not more), as they enjoy sliding down them.

Shade, imaginative play elements, and significant platform climbing opportunities were combined to make the perfect junior play structure, offered in a fresh “citrus” colour palette.

GULFBECK VILLAGE SQUARE
MILTON

$32,200
GulfBeck Village is a modern community with a young and vibrant pulse. Residential living is mixed among retail space, coffee shops, and art studios. The idea of bringing people out of their homes to engage in their community and interact with neighbours is the heartbeat of the development and a core philosophy of living here.

For the central playspace, Milton wanted something vibrant that would attract children to play and adults to gather. They wanted the playground to become a meeting place with a structure that was easy for guardians to watch children play on. The GulfBeck playground is both simple and complex, modern and traditional, and has served its purpose perfectly in "The Village."

This structure can accommodate a high number of users, has clear sightlines for safety and to deter vandalism, and offers equipment for various elements of play such as climbing, sliding, balance, and brachiating. The Warman Park design is an excellent example of an affordable value-packed playground.

Tree forts are a symbol of childhood and a playground theme that never goes out of style. A tree fort concept playground is a perfect fit for an urban playspace, and Woburn Park is no exception. Complete with a timber roof and railings and ample ways to climb into and slide out of the tree fort, users will not grow tired of this structure. We love using this theme in urban neighbourhoods where feedback indicates that homeowners overlooking playgrounds prefer tree fort designs compared to playgrounds with obscure colours or themes.

A place for “tweens” to socialize, imaginative play for younger users, and the perfect structure for active games of “Grounders”, all designed to fit within a pre-established footprint.

Designing a playground with a natural aesthetic meant more than adding an earthy colour scheme and rustic rock climbers. For the Meadowlark Playground we selected play components that mimic how children interact with nature and how they explore, climb, and play in natural environments. We then incorporated these play elements into the playground design.

Rope climbing is trending in playground design and offers incredible opportunities for users of all ages to build muscle strength, improve balance, and develop hand-eye coordination. Rope products can accommodate a high number of users, adding play value to the playground.

The rope climbing elements in this playground are not to be “overshadowed” by the magnitude of play equipment packed into the design. Shadow Play elements bring art and sculpture to the playground via an inclusive and interactive product that casts coloured light onto the ground below.

Millions of years in the making, this dinosaur-themed playground was built to commemorate the discovery of a complete Hadrosaur skeleton. Excavators from Qualico Developments unearthed the paleontological treasure while digging a sewer line for their new residential development.

Park N Play representative Shelley Robinson worked passionately with local museums, the Municipality of Leduc, Alberta, and the developer to bring the dinosaur theme to life in the form of a playground for the new residents.
